present the teachers and pupils began coming in at 2:30 and seated themselves by couples as soon as they entered. Each Chinaman usually had to be the director of the choir and almost invariably led his teacher to some part of the room as far removed as possible from where the others were seated. It was a warm day, and the majority of the Chinamen carried their Eastern fans, with which they kept themselves and teachers cool, only stopping the fanning when exercises of some kind necessitated whispered conversations.

A SUNDAY-SCHOOL PUPIL.

When it was time for the exercises, to open Mr. Lyon invited teachers and pupils to come up to the front of the room. In selecting seats the second time the Chinamen were still allowed by their teachers to make the choice, and each pupil did so with the evident intention of having his teacher sit close to himself.

The school was opened with singing, in which the Chinamen joined vociferously, without regard to tune or the words of the hymn. Each Chinaman held the book for his teacher, and watched the page as closely as if he were a professor of the English language instead of a scholar learning his A B C's. A teacher would occasionally smile approvingly at his pupil, and a look of pride would pass over the favored one's countenance. He would sing a little louder, move closer to his teacher, and at the end of the verse whisper something that never reached the ears of a third person.

One of the most dignified (and staid) found a seat for himself and teacher in the front part of the room. His teacher was young and the most attractive girl present. The pupil was leaning to read from a primer. He was bright and his teacher was earnest. As the lesson progressed their chairs were moved nearer together, until the faces of the two were so close that the Chinaman's hair looked fanned a rosy glow on the cheek of his teacher. He was dressed in the garb of an American. His queue had been sacrificed. He could speak fairly good English.

Very few of the teachers, as far as the English spoken by them was concerned, were of the first rank. They were already fastened upon their faces. Their glances met, the Chinaman's countenance did not change. His face was very close to that of his teacher. The celestial started into the eyes of the girl while she waited patiently for him to return to the lesson. Suddenly she noticed that the reporter was watching her. Her face crimsoned, she pushed her chair away from the Chinaman and looked at the opposite wall. Still the girl, leaning forward, smiled and the hanging corners of his teacher's face, and seemed to delight in his discomfiture.

"Who is that man?" the reporter asked a native of the school. "Oh, he is one of our brightest boys who has forgotten his name," was the reply. The answer was true. He was bright, and was called a boy and looked upon as a boy by teachers and his contemporaries, located as a simple-minded boy by all who in kind in the school-room. But beneath this seeming simplicity was the brain of a young man who was as capable as his ancestor and seemingly assimilated with the Western civilization.

There were not enough teachers to supply each Chinaman with a partner in this particular Sunday-school. Mr. Lyon was forced to keep up a number of desks for the use of the pupils. The main body of the pupils were divided into two classes, and the teacher would alternate between them. As soon as the lesson was completed he would walk in among the teacher and found a seat in another part of the room. Just then Mr. Lyon came up to the reporter and explained that the cental man was his teacher, the Chinaman had attempted some time ago to take charge of a class, but the pupils rebelled.

After the exercises were completed a meeting of the Chinese Y. M. C. A. was held in the same room. All the Chinamen and a few of the teachers remained. The time was spent in conversation and singing.

The letter purporting to come from an organization of workmen known as the Associated Trades Indorsing the Introduction of the Trolley System on all the Lines of the Union Railroad Company in the Annexed District, otherwise known as the "Huckleberry road," is republished by the representative labor men of this city.

The letter in question, which has been received by the Railroad Committee of the Board of Aldermen, is as follows: We approve your proposition to New York workmen to do more and save the application of the Union Railroad Company for a franchise, in order to construct and operate a street car line on certain streets and avenues of the annexed district, and we do so on the understanding that various labor organizations and their representatives shall be consulted in every step of the proposed plan, comprising a membership of 8,000.

The Associated Trades, which has been organized for the purpose of representing the interests of the laboring classes in this city, and not one of the men whose names are attached to the appeal, have ever been heard of by representative labor men heretofore. The general opinion is that the appeal was concocted in order to impose upon the City Fathers, and a demand is made that their petition be thoroughly investigated by the Committee on Public Safety.

Secretary H. V. Clayton, of the Board of Working Delegates, said to an evening paper: "I have just received to the matter this morning. 'If there is any such organization as the Associated Trades, it is a very real one. It is a labor organization with the membership of this city, and without the knowledge of organized labor leaders. There is no such organization, I am quite sure.'"

Interest in the famous Nathan murder mystery recently reawakened by the death abroad of Washington Nathan, son of the murdered man, was today again aroused by news from Hartford, Conn., that a possible clue has been found in that city.

In the days after the commission of the crime, when the whole city was wild with excitement, Mayor A. Oakey Hall issued a proclamation offering a number of rewards. Among them was the following: A reward of $200 will be given to the man who will get the murderer of Nathan, or who will help to get him, or who will give any information that will lead to his capture. The man who will get the murderer of Nathan, or who will help to get him, or who will give any information that will lead to his capture.

Wagon Company, one of these men wanted for the murder of Nathan, N. Y., was arrested in Hartford, E. J. and right.

FRESH AIR AT BELDEN POINT. Mothers and Babies Enjoy Another of "The Evening World's" Outings.

THE EVENING WORLD'S fourth excursion for weary mothers and their babies to beautiful Belden Point was given yesterday. There was the usual large attendance of women with children in arms or cradles in the hand, and they that they enjoyed the pleasant ride on the iron steambot up the East River, past Blackwell's and the other islands and out to the sound, is a story to state the last in a very mild manner. They had a good time, too, at the Point, where Proprietor Belden had things so arranged that the mothers and babies spent a delightful day at the resort and seemed to get a great deal of good from the outing.

Belden Point is swept by refreshing breezes from the West, and is equipped with all the latest and best of modern appliances. It has everything in fact that is looked for in a popular resort. It is patronized by the best elements of the city. The iron steambot makes trips there every two hours daily, as will be seen by reference to their advertisement in another column.

The mothers and babies will have another outing at the Point Friday. They will go on the boat that leaves the foot of East River at 10:30 A. M. and returns about sundown.

Threatening Lumber Strike. WATSON, Wis., Aug. 2.—The men employed at the Barker & Stewart Lumber Company's Mills have struck for ten hours and pay once a week. There are about five hundred men out. Trouble is anticipated.

Left in the rear — soap. Pearlina is more efficient, and is just as cheap. It is more convenient, and is just as safe. It makes clothes clean, while saving the work; it makes them last longer, by saving the wear. All washing and cleaning is done best with Pearlina. What soap does with force, Pearlina does with ease.
